Actually since Operating-system A Leopard (OS X 10.5) the Macintosh provides these your local library as pre-defined locations in the system's Desktop Screen Saver preferences pane. Although it's easy to use these picture your local library, it's a great concept to duplicating the images you aim to make use of as desktop picture to a specific folder, self-employed of your Pictures, iPhoto or Aperture library. In addition to developing photos and keeping them in a unique folder, you can make use of your existing, or image collection as a resource of images for desktop wallpapers.

That way you can edit images in any of the image your local library without stressing about impacting their desktop wallpapers counterparts.
